SHANGHAI IN BRIEF

Shanghai, situated on the south bank of the world's third longest river, the Changjiang (Yangtze), at its outlet to the sea, is one of the three municipalities under the direct jurisdiction of the central govermnent of the People's Republic of China. Its total area is 6,100 square kilometres, of which the urban districts constitute about 150 square kilometres. The population of Shanghai is 11 million, of which 5.9 million are in the city proper. Lying in a subtropical zone, Shanghai has a climate with four distinct seasons.

History shows that Shanghai was in its early years a fishing village. After the 16th century, it was turned into a prosperous port busy with sailboats plying the Huangpu River. Shanghai was liberated in May 1949, and since then, the people of Shanghai have embarked on a new course.

Now, Shanghai has been changed from a consumer city of the past into an important base of China's industry, science and technology, as well as foreign trade. As an important international port, Shanghai has contacts with over 300 ports in more than 150 countries and regions. At present, under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, the people of Shanghai are striving to build Shanghai into a modern city in order to make greater contributions to the accomplishment of the four modernizations.
